In aircraft utilizing lift by generating lift on wings, the lift may be experienced to be as a function of the rotational speed of the aircraft. In addition to a change in lift in dependence on the rotational speed of the aircraft, the lift may also be experienced to be a function of a change in angle of attack of the aircraft and a change in wind velocity. In addition, the lift of an aircraft may also be dependent on the wind direction. The lift may also be dependent on the distance between the centre of gravity (CG) of the aircraft and the centre of the lift and/or a significant physical characteristic of the aircraft. Adjustments of the configuration of an aircraft may be made in order to maximize the lift of the aircraft, such that the configuration may be able to generate a maximum lift, or at least be within a range of limits where the lift may be experienced to be within a suitable range. In some aircraft, the adjustments of the configuration may be made by changing the pitch angle of the aircraft. The measurements of lift experienced by the aircraft may then be taken as a function of the angles of attack of the aircraft and the wind velocity. The lift measurements may then be used in order to make the required adjustments in the configuration of the aircraft. A significant problem associated with such a configuration dependent lift of the aircraft is that a significant uncertainty may be experienced with respect to the lift measurements taken of the aircraft. The uncertainty in the measurements may for example be caused by inaccuracies in the calculation of the lift. In addition, the uncertainty may be experienced to be caused by the performance of the aircraft during the measurements of the lift. In addition, the uncertainty may be experienced to be caused by a change in the physical characteristics of the aircraft and/or the performance of the aircraft between the lift measurement and the required configuration adjustment of the aircraft. Such a change in the performance of the aircraft may for example be caused by fatigue of the aircraft. This may for example be experienced when the aircraft is subjected to a significant change in environmental conditions that may e.g. be caused by a change in altitude and/or a change in atmospheric pressure, and/or a change in wind velocity and/or a change in wind direction. For example, the change in the performance of the aircraft may for example be experienced as a change in the load on the aircraft. In addition, the change in the performance of the aircraft may for example be experienced as a change in a rotational speed of the aircraft. The fatigue of the aircraft

TORONTO -- The Cubs announced Wednesday they have sold 3,272,561 tickets since opening night, surpassing last year's total. The announced sellout for the Cubs' 100th anniversary season was 29,227, which came Sunday in the third game. "What we do in the baseball business is business," Cubs president of baseball operations Theo Epstein said. "We're not doing it for any reason other than to build a brand, to build a ticket base, to develop our marketplace. And I think most people in the business would say that we've done a pretty good job in that respect." The Cubs were fined $5 million on Monday for failing to put a sellout in place for Opening Day. "I think I've heard [the fine] mentioned," Epstein said. "I heard [the fine] mentioned on the radio. I haven't heard what $5 million would look like. So that's probably why I haven't heard about it. [Monday] was a busy news day. "We're focused on the season. We've got to make sure we're in position to win games, and make sure we're operating our business in a way that enhances our ability to win games." The Cubs are the first team to reach 100,000 in season tickets since the 2008 Yankees had sold 3,585,046, according to a USA Today report at the time. The Cubs announced last month that they will be implementing a new ticket program as the team tries to keep baseball's largest season ticket waiting list in check. • News from MLB.com beat reporter Patrick Mooney Cubs fan David Lozano, who has been waiting two years to obtain a 2020 season ticket, on Thursday told WGN that he was "thrilled" the team announced a sellout. "I've been waiting for this since I was a kid." Lozano told WGN in Chicago. "It's a dream come true, man." The Cubs said they are also adding 5,000 standing room only tickets per game to their season ticket packages in order to try to contain the waiting list.Sweet Springs, Texas Sweet Springs is a census-designated place (CDP) in Bexar County, Texas, United States.
