pre-intermediate students are the key to. Gambling and gambling-related behaviors in an Inner-city, Hispanic community: results from a systematic review. Routinely conducted population-based data on gambling and gambling-related behaviors are needed to inform tobacco control, public health, and policy initiatives. This systematic review synthesizes the available research evidence to address gaps in knowledge on the prevalence, contexts, and associated factors of gambling and gambling-related behaviors (e.g., substance use, delinquent behavior) in Hispanic communities. A systematic review of articles published from 1980 through 2005 was conducted to identify original articles that (a) reported on the prevalence of gambling or gambling-related behaviors in a nationally or community-based representative Hispanic sample; and (b) were conducted in the United States or offered any level of evidence according to the United States Preventive Services Task Force guidelines for risk-based tobacco prevention programs (e.g., non-commercial gambling). Study quality was assessed through a checklist based on 31 criteria. Thirty-three
