My initial reaction to the passing of Martin Véronneau was, "what's this", and then "wait, I actually like him". I'm not even all that fond of Béatrice et Patrick

(note that's not "tehe Béatrice et Patrick", I meant two separate things) and I know I've seen Béatrice et Patrick's work before but I couldn't recall exactly what and the writing has always been distracting so I'd very much like to stop thinking about it. After doing a few searches I found the post I was looking for, which detailed a very similar project, albeit much more in-depth. [Apollo Project, by Martin Véronneau](And for a writer it was certainly enlightening. It was easy to see how Béatrice et Patrick included so much content, and it's clear that it's very difficult to achieve. Look at the project's [GitHub page](and the [Technical Specification](too.
