The influence of repeated treatment with the herbicide linuron on reproductive parameters in male rats has been investigated using oral doses of 50, 150 and 300 mg/kg of unmodified or modified linuron. Linuron given in the drinking water was removed from the diet 48 h before mating and throughout mating and pregnancy. Groups of 15 male rats were dosed twice daily with one of the three linuron doses, or an untreated control group. In the initial and terminal endpoints of the study, there were no effects of unmodified linuron on fertility, testes weight, testes and epididymides histology, sperm count, testicular and plasma levels of testosterone, luteinizing hormone, follicle stimulating hormone and prolactin. However, there was a significant decrease in sperm count and motility in the spermatozoa of the unmodified linuron-treated rats in the terminal endpoint. In the modified linuron-treated rats, there were no effects on male reproductive parameters. Also, there were no effects of linuron on thyroid function or on the testes thyroid gland and the serum thyroid levels. The results of
