Weijer in 1975 to describe the endocrine (specialized cells in the body that produce or respond to hormones) and metabolic (chemical reaction in the body) changes associated with very high physical activity and training. It is similar to the term "superhuman". Background The term "supermetabolism" was first proposed by Dutch endocrinologist G.P. Weijer in 1975, to denote the endocrine and metabolic changes associated with very high endurance exercise, high-intensity exercise or high-volume resistance exercise in humans. "During intense exercise or training, the body is confronted with a significant demand for oxygen and nutrients, the intake of which is not matched by the usual availability", Weijer stated. While there is "overall agreement that the body responds to exercise/training by developing a supermetabolic state 6d1f23a050
