Google Drive's Terms of Service dictate all users must comply with local laws, including copyright restrictions. Google explicitly warns against uploading content for which you don't have the necessary sharing permissions and also warns that violations may lead to account suspension. Adding copyrighted files to your Drive or downloading them to your computer may also trigger punitive measures. Apple TV is notoriously bad when it comes to streaming quality. If you'd like to use it to watch videos on-the-go, then you're definitely better off with a Chromecast or Roku. As for the Apple TV's video player, you can download and play videos using the BigScreen app. Once that's done, you can watch them wherever you are. If you want to watch movies online for free, Popcorn Time is the platform for you. Apart from the fact that it makes all copyright-protected content legally available for free, this decentralized streaming platform also lets you download 1080p and 4K movies whenever and wherever you want. Summing it up, the best subtitle downloader and video downloader for Mac is called Pulltube. If you download subtitle files online, try a reliable ad blocker like ClearVPN to ensure a safe browsing experience. Beamer will help you load subtitles and stream content to TV, and iFlicks is the best way to open subtitles on an iOS device. Finally, there's no better app for switching between subtitle tracks than Movist Pro. And you know what's the best thing All of these apps are free. If you can bear with reduced quality, you're better off with the download version than with the streaming version. But if you have to have a quality experience, be prepared to spend, oh, hundreds, of dollars on a download-compatible device and content. Streaming services typically have a monthly or annual fee, but the quality you get from them is worth the cost.
