It would be nice if Photoshop had a more elegant way to load a preview of the same size as the canvas for experimental work. Otherwise, experiment with something like the inverse-curve masking tool. Picking your best exposure and masking the highlights, shadows, and middle gray tones can sometimes yield remarkable results. This is the most significant change introduced since the previous version. An enormous amount of time has been spent polishing the interface. This is a huge benefit for myself and other users – I can now work on a very sophisticated project, then click to bring up a popup and switch to Quick Mask while it prepares. I can even save a quick version of the PSD if I want. Quick Mask is always available on the right-hand side of the preview area. I found this feature limited in the previous version when masking one or more layers. Once I selected the masked part(s), the slider reset, and I could no longer see the original until I re-dragged the mask over the new selection. With the current version I can very easily see the original layer area, thanks to the new Quick Masking feature. This is perhaps the most intriguing new feature: Audience Feedback. If you're submitting a file for review and need to know if you're doing a good job or not, you can do so with the new Audience Feedback feature. With the Audience Feedback feature, the reviewer can track the changes made to the file and give you feedback in real-time as you work on it. If they like what you're doing, they can provide the green check mark before you even finish the changes you wanted to make. This is a powerful tool.

Google Lens: With the new Lens Add-on, Photoshop will have access to Google Lens — provided in the Google Assistant mobile app, in Google Photos, and the Google Lens Chrome extension on desktop. Change Tracking: Change tracking technology is a feature that enables you to change an element on a copy of an edited image in real time, without having to rebuild and relink any other layers in a project. This enables you to update or complete workflows without essentially duplicating your work. Design for Touch: One of the most exciting updates to Photoshop will be our touch friendly design (bring forth the signature AEC workspaces), which means that Photoshop will be more intuitive and accessible on touch sensitive screens. You'll be able to do more right from your desktop or tablet with Photoshop, or at least make editing much easier. Selection Brush: With the new Selection Brush, users can easily paint out regions of a photo's background. The Selection Brush can cover a selected region or apply a selection to a new, blank area. To improve overall accuracy, the brush can intelligently size and color itself so that you can see the brush strokes on your photo's background. Fill & Blur: Photoshop now provides one-click Edit > Fill & Blur, to quickly fill white elements or eliminate unwanted objects. With these edits, you can seamlessly blend content and overlapping elements together, giving your images an eye-catching, euphoric blur.
